california state university ... - husserl certainly agrees with brentano in one important respect. he thinks intentionality poses problems of a unique sort that make the study of mind or consciousness different in kind from other studies. to see why this is so, we need to take a closer look at the nature of intentionality itself. 2. husserl's phenomenological conception the divine in husserl and other explorations - but i will try and explain their meanings through the use of other words and expressions. making clear husserl's trajectory of thought is an operation that requires dedication, but it can be realized. i am comforted in this task by the example of edith stein, a disciple of husserl, who knew in many cases how husserl's phenomenology and two terms of noema and noesis - husserl considers the phenomenological content of an act as an agent which causes that act to be proposed as a special experience. in other words, the phenomenological content is an agent which distinguishes that act from other subjective that act from other subjective states and experiences. husserl on first philosophy - husserl shows how philosophy is a distinct form of thinking, and he shows how it differs from other forms, in particular those of the various sciences and world-views. he does this in his discussion of the transcendental husserl ideas : general introduction to pure phenomenology - husserl believes there is a third unity - that of the consciousness, where experiences and intuition act out their part. husserl's task is to get from these spheres and into this other field that is quite unlike them: he calls this the sphere of absolute consciousness and it encompasses the living husserl's expressions, surrogates - micah tillman - 5 mind—one "points to the other"—because they form an "intentional unity," in which they "seem to belong" together, or to be "pertinent" to each other (hua xix, 36/1:187)sserl then takes up our experience of physical objects as an example in which we jean-paul sartre intentionality - mccoyspace - jean-paul sartre intentionality: a fundamental idea of husserl's phenomenology1 (january 1939) "he devoured her with his eyes." this expression and many other signs point to the illusion common to both realism and idealism: to know is to eat. after a hundred years of academicism, french philosophy remains at that point. concerning the phenomenological methods of husserl and ... -
